LAMANITES, THE.

The people who, in connection with their kindred, the Nephites, occupied the American continent from about B. C. 590 to A. C. 385, in which latter year they destroyed the Nephites and remained possessors of the entire land. The American Indians are their degraded descendants. These people were of Hebrew origin, and are called Lamanites, from Laman, the eldest son of Lehi, who was the leading spirit in the events that led to their separation from the Nephites and their formation as a distinct people. Originally, the Lamanites were the children of Laman, Lemuel, and some of the family of Ishmael; but as the centuries passed there were many defections in both nations, when the dissatisfied would join the opposing race and affiliate and intermix with them, so that the two names at last became more an indication of religion and civilization than of birth.

NEPHI.

The son of Lehi. One of the most conspicuous characters in the history of God's Church, a great prophet, teacher and leader, and the father of the Nephite race. He left Jerusalem for the promised land (America) with his father's family B. C. 600, and, by reason of his faith, zeal and faithfulness, he soon became the actual leader of the colony. After his father's death, when the two parties divided, he led his followers to a new home, where he became their king and high priest, and where also he built a temple.

NEPHI, Son of Helaman.

One of the greatest prophets of the Nephite race. He was chief judge of the republic from B. C. 239 to B. C. 30. The great events that mark his life are the conversion of the Lamanites (B. C. 30) under his preaching and that of his brother Lehi; his announcement of the assassination of the chief judge Sesostram, B. C. 23; his prayers to heaven for a famine to bring the people to their senses, which prayers were answered (B. C. 19); and his later interest in the conversion of the famine stricken (B. C. 16). He was translated B. C. 1.

A son of Pahoran, the elder, who, upon the death of his father, aspired to the vacant judgment seat. When the choice of the Nephite people fell on his brother, Pahoran, the younger, Paanchi raised the standard of revolt, in which he was sustained by the sympathies of a large body of people. Before he could put his revolutionary intentions into action he was arrested, tried and sentenced to death (B. C. 52).

At the death of Pahoran, the elder, the Nephite Chief Judge, three of his sons contended for the succession. The people chose Pahoran, the younger. To this choice Pacumeni assented, while the other brother, Paanchi, rose in rebellion. Shortly after, Pahoran was assassinated by Kishkumen, a follower of Paanchi, when Pacumeni was chosen by the people to fill the vacant judgment seat. He was slain in battle with the Lamanites (B.
